Several members of the Southeastern Illinois College athletic teams have been volunteering their time at the Mary Jo Oldham Center for Child Study, the campus day care and clinical site for early childhood education. The student athletes have taken time from their already-hectic schedules of classes, practice, and games to read books to the children in the center.

Center staff are most appreciative of the volunteers. The children love to have story time, and love to have visitors read to them. The children see many of the student-athletes during their play time in the college gymnasium. It means a lot to them to spend time with some of the ball players.

Taylor Morris reads to the children.

Teyonna Simmons reads to the children.

Anna Best reads to the children.

Kyle Peyton reads to the children.